26TH NATIONAL CONVENTION

MEN FOR THE AGES

Sketches of the ancient architects whose names designate our chapters. Here are the few facts known about Paeonios, Dinocrates, and Polyklitos.

Now I will proceed to the discussion of Paeonios, Dinocrates, and Polyklitos, whose names are borne by the (now inactive) chapters at Kansas State, University of Texas, and Carnegie Institute of Technology.

Associate of Demetrios

Paeonios must be content with the mere mention of his name as associated with Demetrios in the completion of the Temple of Artemis at Ephesus. This temple was begun about 600 B.C. and was finished about 330 B. C. What part of the work was done by Paeonios we do not know, but, since Demetrios was by way of being a specialist in temples of Artemis, he may have been retained in an advisory capacity, while Paeonios did the hard work.

An Early Promoter

Dinocrates, of Macedonia, was an architect of the fourth century B.C. He appears under eight different names as given by Brown. This does not signify that he changed his name of necessity, or that they were aliases, but shows the slight value of a mere name when compared with deeds of greatness.

Dinocrates was the great promoter of ancient times. Provided with letters of recommendation to the principal persons of the Alexandrian court he set out from his native country with the hope of gaining favor with the monarch. The courtiers made him promises which they neglected to perform and thus prevented his access to Alexander, but only for a time. Using novel means of gaining the ruler's notice Dinocrates finally interested him in the building of a new city.

The architect was usefully employed in the building of the extensive foundations of Alexandria, and few architects have had the opportunity to direct works of greater importance.

He is believed to have rebuilt the Artemesium at Ephesus after its destruction by fire and to have erected another at Alexandria.

A Sculptor and Architect

Polyklitos lived in the last part of the fifth century B.C. He was a celebrated Greek sculptor and architect, associated with the high development of abstract proportion which characterizes Greek sculpture. He seems to have realized the athletic type, or ideal, to the entire satisfaction of the Greek world and made a figure embodying the accepted proportion, which was called the "Canon."

This canon is supposed to have been a simple figure carrying a spear (doryphorus), described by Pliny and properly represented by several replicas. The best of these was found at Pompeii and is in the museum at Naples. The most important monumental work of Polyklitos was the chryselephantine Hera at Argos, represented by the so-called Ludovisi Juno.

This installment concludes the series of sketches written by Jos. J. Patterson, past Grand Lecturer. The series was printed in THE ARCHI before the installation of Theron and Vitruvius chapters, and therefore includes no history of these men. Sketches of Theron and Vitruvius will appear in future issues, presented as part of the new Fraternity History series, as they become available.

Wanted:

and Vitruvius
for completion of this series

On our cover:

The beautiful workmanship and appropriate symbolism incorporated in the Alpha Rho Chi Medal have been the subject of enthusiastic comment of all who have seen the finished medals, which are executed in bronze. Merrell Gage, prominent Los Angeles sculptor, deserves much credit for his sympathetic understanding and excellent cooperation throughout its long period of study and execution.

ALPHA RHO CHI MEDALS FOR 1958 AWARDED

Twenty-fifth annual awards distributed to 51 accredited architectural schools in the United States.

Winners of the Alpha Rho Chi Medal for 1958 were announced in June at 51 architectural schools. The award, established in 1931, is given annually to "encourage professional leadership by rewarding student accomplishment; promote the ideals of professional service by acknowledging distinctive individual contributions to school life; stimulate professional merit by commending qualities in the student not necessarily pertaining to scholarship."

The bronze medal, designed by Merrell Gage, sculptor, is awarded to a graduating senior at each accredited architectural school, selection being made by the faculty. It has been awarded annually at most of the schools since 1932, except in 1944 and 1945 and at those times when a faculty withheld nomination because of the absence of worthy candidates.

P. I. C. P A G E

Second installment of the text of the thought-provoking Biennial Banquet talk by Judge Frank A. Myers, Chairman of the IRAC.

I think that even the most doubtful must now admit that there is a definite line of attack against the existence of the college fraternity as it was originally created and organized. In fact, it now to me has assumed a definite pattern with the objective not correction — but destruction!

In talking against certain provisions of the Civil Rights Bill which was before Congress, a Senator used this very pertinent language —

“The right to enjoy all civil liberties is basic to a free people and must be protected. It is however, a tragic error to attempt the protection of civil rights for any one group through a process which denies a liberty equally precious to another group in this nation.”

Assuming that the critics of the discriminatory practices and policies of the college fraternity are acting in good faith, which I doubt in the major number of instances, and sincerely are seeking to protect minority “rights” from discrimination by reason of race, creed or color, they are also completely ignoring the rights of fraternity members to choose their new associates in accordance with any standards that they may set, free from any interference or dictation from sources outside the organization. BUT the critics are basing their claims upon a false premise. Membership in a social group like a college fraternity is not a “civil right” but a “social privilege”; whereas, the right to free association in the pursuit of happiness is a constitutional right.

Two court decisions upholding similar rights of social organizations have been announced during 1957: (1) On April 5, 1957, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin upheld a lower court ruling which had denied relief to two Negroes who were refused membership in a Milwaukee local of the Bricklayers Union, saying that unions are voluntary associations into which applicants cannot force themselves even though discrimination by unions is undesirable. Even the minority opinion in this case was based upon a difference between “unions” and other voluntary associations where there is no restriction on the power to admit or reject applicants where such groups are associated for purely social or fraternal purposes. This decision would seem to be particularly pertinent to the professional groups which do not necessarily include social activities. (2) In December 1957, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia ruled that the Metropolitan Police Boys Club might be operated on a segregated basis. It had been claimed that the clubs were part of the District of Columbia government and therefore segregation in membership should not be enforced (no doubt having in mind the Girard case) but the Court held that the club was a “private institution” and despite the fact that some of the city’s police worked full-time for the club in some of its activities. The opinion said: “If each time a government lends its assistance to a private institution it were to acquire that institution as an arm of government, then government would indeed become a many-armed thing.”

It is also encouraging to find that the American college fraternity system is beginning to discover friends in many quarters. These persons have come to our defense voluntarily after those dark days when it appeared that we had no friends anywhere, and were not even doing much to defend ourselves. I would like to outline some examples of fraternity supporters:

(1) In the May 5th issue 1957 of the Chicago Tribune, there appeared an article by George Gould entitled “Fraternities Come of Age” which showed a good understanding of the fraternity.

(2) “In Defense of Fraternities” (Part I and Part II) were two articles in the National Review for May 11 and 18, 1957, by Russell Kirk (a non-fraternity man) which were excellent presentations of the fraternity’s rights.

“On nearly every college faculty will be found some persons who talk of ‘total education,’ of how the college ought to re-make the personalities of its students, of how the college ought to stamp out ancient prejudices and parental notions and creeds outworn. These ideologues commonly have a good deal to do with campus movements to abolish or strictly regulate the fraternities.

But these ideologues almost never form the majority of any faculty or college administration; still more seldom do they form the majority of any board of college trustees; and they certainly do not represent the views of most alumni, let alone the American public. I do advise fraternity members not to give ground before these gentry; to appeal to a court against them, if necessary. For in defending their own right to voluntary association, fraternities are defending the whole concept of free community. And whatever the failings of our college fraternities, they are quite right in maintaining that only those private clubs, the fraternities, have the right to say who shall be invited to join and who shall not. Everybody does not belong to everybody else.”

(3) We also have good newspaperman friends in George Todt (IKE) who writes a column in “The Valley Times” out in San Fernando Valley, California. He has written a number of pro-fraternity articles in 1956 and 1957. From an article written in February 21, 1956 issue he said:

“The most unjust accusation is that they (fraternities) are ‘undemocratic.’ This stems from the fact that a prospective pledge is not permitted to walk into the organization of his choosing and simply state, ‘I am here. I have the money to be initiated. Now hand me my pin.’

What is completely overlooked here is the logic that any brotherhood — if it is to be effective — must be comprised of congenial and sympathetic persons. This does not imply either inferiority or superiority of those who may have different characteristics from the group in question. But it is up to the group to determine whether the qualifications of the individual concerned may entitle him or her to be considered congenial to the larger body. How can we expect to enjoy the 'pursuit of happiness' unless we are at liberty to choose for ourselves the friends who are the most sympathetic and congenial to us."

(4) But I specially call your attention to the issue of the American Mercury for February and March, 1958, and to the section titled "College Forum" (p. 150) covering criticism on the newspaper coverage of the NIC Conference in Colorado Springs last December 1957. The Mercury spoke of the urgent topic at that Conference which was "the increasingly subversive threat throughout the Republic against the membership of college fraternities — against the American Right of a social organization to establish its own social and moral requirements for membership, and to maintain the character of its membership." We expect the fraternities to win out, by this public — not subversive campaign. The same people in Manhattan who were instigators and financiers of our troubles in the South, in our private schools and private clubs and hotels, are behind this ideological and Marxian attack, in our 48 states, on college fraternity life. They work by stealth, deceptive propaganda, through useful stooges. A large segment of the press of the country has fallen into this trap by publishing completely distorted versions of the purpose of interfraternity action. We hope more and more newspapers, publishers and editors, will join (in publishing the facts and efforts of the fraternities). They must or they will wake up in a not too distant day and find their newspaper and editorial RIGHTS have been taken away.

Other Opposition

Aside from certain college administrations where movements are now noted against college fraternities, all of which indicate the same pattern of development and progress, there are certain other groups which have publicly announced their opposition to the fraternity's right to be selective in respect to new members and to have control of membership qualification on a nation-wide basis. (1) Certain Grade B motion pictures have been filmed such as "Sorority House or Confessions of a Sorority Girl" which was a Sunset production for American International Pictures; and "Hell Week" for AB-PT Pictures Corporation. (I have not seen either picture so am unable to give you my impressions.) (2) The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, which issued a pamphlet April-May 1957 under the title of "Rights" in which the statements appear "It is widely felt that fraternity discrimination retards the educational process, impairing the intellectual growth of both those students who are accepted for membership and those who are not" and "College officials and chapter leaders hold, however, that it is the national executives who are violating the principle of free association by denying to the locals the right to select their own members." (3) The American Jewish Committee, which in its Year Book expresses a concern with activities on the college campuses relating to admission practices of fraternities and sororities; a majority of which discriminate on racial or religious grounds; (4) The official publication of the American Association of Commoners Club, January 1958 issue, was highly critical of the NIC Conference in Colorado Springs, and of the national control of local chapters by their national organization; (5) United States National Students Association has issued at regular intervals over the years statements and resolutions condemning the discriminatory practices of college fraternities and the Ninth Annual Students Congress in Chicago, Illinois in 1956 decided that NSA would continue its efforts for complete elimination of discrimination in student organizations, thereby re-iterating the position heretofore taken with respect to fraternities. The Tenth Annual Students Congress in 1957 at the University of Michigan again repeated the previous stand so that there has been no change in the objectives of NSA. However, a new paragraph has been included in the Area on "Restrictive Clauses" which is quite interesting — "USNSA upholds the right of a campus, student or social organization to select members of any race, color, religion, creed, or national origin, political belief without restrictions and further disapproves of any action to force a social group to accept any person it does not wish." A resolution was also adopted urging closer relationship between NIC, NPC and USNSA. It does not mention the professional groups.
